Collecting baseball cards may never bring the riches that many envisioned during the boom years of the 1980s and 1990s, but there are still thousands of hobbyists who can’t get enough of the wax- or mylar-packed goodies, whether new or vintage.

And, thanks to the Internet, it’s easier than ever to find pictures of even the most fabled cards in the hobby, which takes some of the pain out of knowing that you probably won’t ever own and actual T-206 Honus Wagner rarity.

As the net buzz around baseball cards — and other sports cards and collectibles — has grown over the last two decades, so too has the number of sites to help you get your collecting jollies. In fact, it can be downright confusing to keep track of all the options out there, but we have hand-selected more than 450 sports card websites to help you love your collection even more than you already do.

And if you’re not a baseball card collector? Don’t worry too much, because there are plenty of football, basketball, and hockey sites sprinkled into the mix.

Here is the complete list, broken into 16 categories so you can pick where you want to spend your hobby reading time.

(Note: Descriptions provided by the sites themselves, where available.)

HOBBY NEWS AND COMMENTARY

The sports card hobby is in a state of constant flux thanks to a never-ending parade of new releases, new discoveries about “old” releases, and on-field developments that shape the market. To keep up with this flurry of activities, collectors turn to the sites below, which feature a solid mix of news stories, op ed pieces, and good, old-fashioned blog posts on various aspects of the hobby, from vintage to modern.

PRICE GUIDES AND AUCTION REPORTS

“What’s my card worth?” It’s been the most common question among baseball card collectors for decades now, ever since we discovered that our cards might be worth something. While the answer to that question is dependent on many factors — condition, season, market size, etc. — it’s always helpful to have guides that aggregate market trends or auction results, and that’s where these sites shine.

For veteran collectors, maybe the most amazing aspect of the Internet is the ability it affords to find information about any set we can imagine. If we wanted to learn about Trans-o-gram statues and cards 20 years ago, we were left to scour through one of the yearly catalogs published by SCD or Beckett, or to consult our local dealers. Now, no matter what the topic, we can just bang out a few keystrokes, and the answer appears on our screens, courtesy of sites like these:
• ~ Vintage Baseball Cards ~ – Vintage baseball cards, pre-1968, wanted by professional, experienced buyer who pays top prices for sports cards in top condition.

• Baseball Card Database – An online encyclopedia of MLB collectibles and history. Pictures and checklists of MLB baseball cards, MLB autographs, publications, and other assorted memorabilia.

• BaseballCardPedia.com

• Caramel-Cards.com

FORUMS

From the earliest days of the hobby, collectors have gathered to talk about baseball cards. In the beginning, there were mailing lists pulled together by scrappy hobbyists who couldn’t get enough information. Those lists led naturally to regional groups and, eventually, to in-person meet-ups at card shows during the 1970s and 1980s. The convention circuit may not be quite as fruitful now as it was 30 years ago, but collectors are finding each other online in numbers that our old networks could never have supported. Here are some of the forums helping us stay connected like never before.

BLOGS

The baseball card blogosphere is loaded with collectors who love to talk about their own cards, cards they had as kids, cards they wish they had, phantom cards, mocked-up cards, and maybe cards they dream about. Many of these folks congregate in blogging communities like Blogspot, Tumblr, and WordPress.com, and their posting habits run the gamut from daily musings to once-a-year-drop-ins. Most of the sites in the list below are “niched-down” and focus on a very narrow swath of the hobby, and some of them haven’t been active in years, but all of them have something to offer if collecting and nostalgia are your game.

SET BLOGS

Over the last several years, a new niche of baseball card site has emerged: the set blog. A set blog generally follows a collector through building one particular issue of baseball cards. Other times, the blogger, writes about cards — sometimes all of them — in the chosen set, relating amusing anecdotes or connecting them to other baseball news or memories. Whatever form the set blog takes, it’s always a treat for readers to be able to dig deep into the particulars of a single issue.

BOX AND CASE BREAKERS

There is nothing in the world quite like cracking open a wax pack of baseball cards, or a box or case of the latest hot issue. After all, this is how most of us got started in the hobby in the first place, and, aside from the chance to pull a great find, it’s hard to beat the nostalgic hit of a pack of cards. It’s not surprising, then, that “breaking” has emerged as a niche among card collectors seeking to reap the vicarious thrills of wax-pack treasure hunting, and these sites are some of the most popular in the genre.

CHAPTER 11

MARKETPLACE SITES

Once upon a time, hobbyists would meet up in the lobby of sports card shows to buy, sell, and trade their cards to build up their collections. In fact, many dealers lamented the fact that, at some shows, most of the transactions took place outside the showroom.
rather than inside. Today, the Internet makes it easier than ever to find the cards you need and the collectors who have them, and the sites below have developed into modern versions of the show-front marketplace.

CHAPTER 12

AUCTION HOUSES

As it became clear that the new cards we all drooled over in the 1980s and 1990s were mass-produced to the extent that they were virtually worthless as soon as we opened the packs, and sometimes before, collectors began turning their attention to vintage material and serial-numbered, graded, or authenticated newer cards. Auction houses, which already had a strong foothold in the hobby, offered collectors and sellers alike a trusted place to buy and sell these “best of the best” items, and the hobby turned to them both for mind-blowing offerings and as a barometer of the high-end market. Here are some of today’s best auction houses.

GRADING SERVICES

As the hobby has moved further and further from the “junk wax” days of the late 1980s and early 1990s, collectors have increasingly placed a premium on scarcity, authenticity, and condition. This maturation has made grading and authentication services more important than ever, and the grading companies have become invaluable resources in judging the relative scarcity and value of our cards. Many of these companies maintain informative and entertaining websites, such as those listed here.

CHAPTER 14

RETAIL SITES

In the “old” days — prior to the Internet — collectors bought their cards at the local department store, at card shops and shows, and, very occasionally, through mail-order catalogs and ads. As the hobby has changed over the last couple of decades, though, so have the avenues we’ve used to build our collections. Now, the lion’s share of all card transactions happen online, and retail sites like the ones below are the lifeblood of the hobby for many collectors.

BLOGSPOT BLOGS

While the blogs listed above will give you plenty of material to fuel your hobby fire, they’re just the tip of the baseball-card blog iceberg. You need look no further than Blogspot itself for proof of just how passionate card collectors are. From dads who love the Cleveland Indians to collectors trying to own every Tim Wallach card ever made to hobbyists tracking down every player in a pack of 1986 Topps cards, these blogs have it all. And the scary — and awesome — part about it is that not even this humongous list will catch everyone, and you can be sure more card blogs will pop up tomorrow as more and more collectors catch the cardboard bug.
